SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 3.

By the Same.

[For the Gazatte

Some thirty years ago it came to pass.
In the peaceful city of brotherly love,
That one man called the other an ass:
This was to much for him, by Jove! He sent him a challenge to mortal combat.

And the challenged man's name was Willing,
While the challenger's name was Silas Shot, And both were bent on killing.

The day set for shooting was bright and fair, The distance was measured, the fight began, And many a hole was shot in the air, Ere a single ball lit its man. At last both heroes had to yield;

Each shot the other one in the arm,
When the police appeared upon the field,
To keep them from doing further harm. The law now took the case in hand

To find who was most at fault. A jury was sworn upon the stand To give their views upon the assault.

And after retiring from nine to three,
They re-entered and brought the verdict that:
Shot shot Willing willingly,
And Willing willingly shot Shot.
